And ing to the men taking the figures for the public service commission. It was evithe best kisses on the local market at dent to-night that Brooklyn expresses were, if anything, more crowded than the expresses bound for the Bronx from the Fourteenth street station.

It was computed that the subway trains were carrying mere than 20,000 an hour under the river during the rush hours. The trains under the river to-night did not keep as closely to their three-minute schedule as the night before. At times there was a delay, and the crowd at the Bowling Green station piled up so fast that when a train did come in a lot of people could not get aboard. At times it looked as if the crush at the bridge had been transferred to the subway.
